Bancroft: Mr. Patten has assumed that because I am at a university I am a free agent and can work at anything I like. I cannot. I have got to get the students interested in their work, and for years I have been trying to get somebody to take up this problem of the action of nitric acid on different metals, to solve the question why you get nitrogen, nitrous oxide, nitric oxide, hydroxylamine and ammonia in the relative proportions obtained. Mr. Patten's ammonia problem is one special branch of that. There is a perfectly wonderful field there, but for some unknown reason it does not appeal to any of the students. I present the subject to them every year and hope they will get interested in it, but they turn their back on it with great regularity. Perhaps some one else, therefore, had better look into it, but I can warn him in advance that he will have his hands full when he comes to the experimental side of it.
