Not illustrated. 1909 Excerpt: .His views on the importance, in composing vocal music, of giving the words their proper value, show that he understood the advance which the school of Lawes had made in that direction. His sensitiveness in this matter 1 March 29, 1668. s January n, 1669. was indeed very acute. He held, for example, that it was impossible to criticize foreign vocal music without a knowledge of the language for which it was written, music to which words are to be sung being rightly affected by national differences of stress and intonation. He even carried his particularity to the point of declaring that concerted singing, where the parts moved unevenly, was a mistake, inasmuch as, the words being lost, the voices were not given their proper function, but were treated simply as musical instruments.¹ This may be an exaggeration, but his views show considerable insight into the nature of song. His choice of solid and dignified words for his own compositions is yet another instance of the justice of his taste. Love-making, play-going, and music formed in Pepys five the main constellation of pleasure. The crowd of smaller delights which surrounded them and filled up every unoccupied moment defy enumeration. He could go nowhere, he could 1 February 16, September 15, 1667. make no fresh acquaintance, he could meet no friend, without a whole crop of experiences which, in his perpetual phrase, do please me mightily. They throng in his Diary with a breathless profusion that stops...
